July 1945. Germany has fallen, and Berlin is nothing but rubble. As American troops and other Allied forces enter the Soviet-controlled capital, the cameras of Special Film Project 186—under the direction of Hollywood filmmaker George Stevens—capture haunting images: the Brandenburg Gate, the Reich Chancellery, Unter den Linden, and the once-grand Adlon Hotel. In Moscow, victory is celebrated with pomp and spectacle on Red Square. Just days later, in nearby Potsdam, the leaders of the victorious nations gather to decide Germany's future and redraw the map of post-war Europe.

"Forbidden" footage is an exaggeration, to get people to click on this. It was never "forbidden". The footage has appeared in many other documentaries here on YouTube.

Não sei expressar o quão maravilhado me sinto diante de documentários verdadeiros como este. Não aguento mais ver falsos documentários em IA. Essas imagens cotidianas no olho do furacão são jóias preciosas. Muito obrigado a quem pesquisou e divulgou, aqui.

Imagine the task of rebuilding everything, just clearing the rubble alone.

Как говорят пристойная мина при плохой игре,прийти на готовое,бой при Арденнах показал всю мощь союзников, Сталину пришлось раньше начать наступление,чтоб их выручить,они своё восстанавливали,вместо желаемых поместий в России,историю можно оболгать,но факты нет

Fun fact. The United States has over 40 military installations in Germany. Yes, Germany is still an occupied country.

The film was restored. Amazing how a country completely destroyed rebuilt rather quickly. Not just the destruction but the loss of almost 10% of the population.

What's incredible is how quickly everything returned to normal despite the immense destruction and mortality. Well-dressed and haughty women walk quietly through the streets. No whining or crying, no begging or bowing down to the victor. Everyone tries to behave with dignity. What admirable people!
